Come join us for a great morning with Dan as he discusses: Creating the Thinking Child & Celebrating the Active Child

Creating the Thinking Child

What are those preschoolers thinking about? Why do they behave so differently? How can I allow them to be curious without being unsafe? If you are asking yourself these questions and more about those fascinating preschoolers this workshop is a must for you! We will discuss putting what we know about preschoolers into our practices. We will analyze the developmental stages of preschoolers, compare the social interactions of preschoolers, and explore strategies that support the development of preschoolers.

Celebrating the Active Child

Teachers report that "Active Children" tend to have more challenging behavior; have more difficulty learning; and often are labeled ADHD. In this presentation you will increase your awareness of how active children acquire knowledge, how to educate them based on current research and how to create curriculum that will support social, creative, cognitive and language development. Plan on participating in active experiences that can be used on Monday morning in the classroom or at your home daycare! We will learn how to provide appropriate activities for active learners. We will also practice techniques that support literacy development, creativity, social and cognitive growth. We will develop strategies to support self control in active learners.
